JORDAN STEMPLEMAN

Cope Don’t Mope

I took the first prank of the day and swam to it for calling me out. It readily blabbed. The body of it, below the neck, gone in the black water, its head all drunken humor, lopsided like the tail of a carrot. It told me that my problem today was I looked nothing like the shower raining down on a child-sized bed where a loaf of bread stands. You are not what hums in the featured grubby plate of Venus flytraps. You do not travel within a fighter jet within the dark endless slick of a younger Ice T’s hair. Until the flood that follows greens the rebuilt road your common rash will return. And the dynamite, a mess, merely goes poof. I’m the chubby lisper who cuts hearts from under the soaking bed. No matter what.